Described as similar to Ring-necked (head shape, dark back panel) but with lighter flanks, lacking white arc bordering breast below the shoulder, head feathers showing a green gloss, and back panel dark slate gray rather than blackish; bill pattern intermediate with base color pale bluish (darker than a Ring-necked) with only a small area of dark at the tip and only a hint of the sub-terminal white band shown on the bill of a Ring-necked Duck.

One was feeding while the other was walking toward it with head and chest lifted and plumped up, then approached the other from the rear as if to copulate, but the approach and retreat seemed much too quick for the act to have occurred. Then he stepped in front of her and dove across her path, gracefully prostrating himself, crest flattened to his crown. She never paid any attention to these actions and kept on feeding.

The grebe made several trips to pile on more vegetation. A roundish white on top appeared to be an egg.

was arranging sticks today on the snag in Toketie Marsh, where a pair has nested in past years. Martha and I saw a pair standing on that branch together yesterday afternoon, the same place where we saw the beginnings of courtship activity last month.

two at Cantrell Rd & Coyote Creek, one at Zumwalt Park and one just south of Elmira on Territorial Rd.

soaring bird described as having tail with thin white terminal tail band, then a wide black subterminal, and then a wide white subterminal band, and then the under-tail coverts with another wide black band meeting that on each side. Ends of the primaries were black-dark, but the main part of them was clear/whitish, giving window appearance. Close enough to see reddish breast and belly bands.
including one on nest

some plumage features suggested dark-morph Ferruginous Hawk but description of bill as small suggests Rough-legged Hawk, possibly the same bird seen here earlier in the month.
standing in a field along the main refuge road soaring west(!) over the Corvallis hospital identified by a couple living near Blodgett, described as a 'hawk-sized bird, smaller than an eagle ... with a crazy hairdo and red on the face, had a white neck ... and the top of the head was a long black streak, like a mohawk.'

photos

After this bird appeared in the Corvallis newspaper, a Philomath resident who raised chickens called to say the bird had been visiting occasionally since mid-Feb, sometimes perching on the roof of his chicken shed. Another Philomath-area resident confided to Karan Fairchild that she and her husband had seen a Caracara in a field while viewing flooding sw. of Corvallis in January, but had not reported it because it seemed so improbable.

finally had our first male on the 13th. Jim heard one briefly on the 11th, but yesterday's bird appears to be visiting the feeders and finally sticking around. This is late for us by about a week.
first female on our Flowering Red Currant this late. we had a male blast through in mid February that was wayyy too early and did not fit any previous pattern

First wave of reports (around 7 Apr) were rather late (almost two weeks after the normal influx). Numbers have been fairly typical since, with one nice weather related fallout in Eugene on 21 April.

mostly of the duller varieties including at least one obvious orestera gray-headed type first of season

First reports (about 20 Apr) were about a week later than normal. Since then numbers have been slightly above average. I have been finding 8-12 daily during my visits to the butte.

all auduboni

Three Myrtle form and an estimated 30 Audubon's form, foraging actively in the upper branches of the forested areas, gleaning and flycatching very actively, many singing.

high count

both Audubon's and Myrtle, strong numbers for later part of passage acting territorial and singing at about 1500 ft which is a low elevation for this species in Coast Range

first report

Numbers have been the lowest I can ever remember at Skinner Butte. I think the most I've had in one visit was about 5-6 birds and most days it has been 1-2. In most years daily counts of 15-20 birds are fairly typical.

Numbers seems to be slightly above average. Arrival is tough to gauge since they winter locally and this year was exceptional in that regard.
